

Walk a #WildMile

Next time you're on a nature adventure, you can contribute to science

If you see a mammal, or a sign of one, tell us about it!

Why should I record mammals?

They're under-recorded

Mammals are some of the most under-recorded species in Britain. With one in four of our native mammals threatened with extinction, and many others in decline they need to be recorded now more than ever.

It's easy!

Recording mammals can be as easy as using an app! We created Mammal Mapper exactly for this purpose. Download it for free and report any mammal that you see.

For conservation

Your data provides us with incredibly important information. By recording mammals we can detect changes in their ranges and population sizes to see if they need help in the future.

Connection with nature

Recording wildlife is a great way to connect with your local nature. You'll gain a deeper understanding of seasonal changes and what emerges when

Feel good!

Did you know there are many benefits to volunteering! You will gain new skills, make new friends and improve mental and physical wellbeing.
